19th IFPE CONGRESS

Improving global mental health: from epidemiological research to practice

The 19th Congress of the International Federation of Psychiatric Epidemiology (IFPE) will take place amidst growing global mental health challenges. With nearly one billion people worldwide living with a mental disorder, mental health remains one of the most neglected areas of public health. Psychiatric epidemiology plays a pivotal role in addressing this gap by providing robust data and methodologies to inform effective policies, programs, and interventions.

The Congress program will cover a wide array of psychiatric epidemiology topics, including the social and environmental determinants of mental illness, genetic epidemiology, and pharmacoepidemiology. It will address how societal factors such as war, terror attacks, poverty, and economic hardship shape mental health and mental illness. In addition, service research will be highlighted as a key tool for improving population mental health. Important topics will include reducing stigma and discrimination, promoting social inclusion, and addressing systemic inequalities in access to care. The Congress will also focus on personal recovery and evidence-based practices that support recovery, such as peer support, shared decision-making, and community-based interventions. This event underscores IFPE's commitment to fostering interdisciplinary collaboration among epidemiologists, clinicians, behavioural scientists, and other health professionals. By integrating epidemiological, clinical, social, and biological research, the Congress aims to drive innovation in public health approaches and methodologies while developing solutions that empower communities and address the neglect of mental health in public health agendas. As psychiatric epidemiology continues to evolve, this Congress will also serve as a platform to mentor young researchers, disseminate cutting-edge findings, and inspire a new generation of mental health professionals committed to promoting global mental health equity. Plenary lectures, symposia, free oral presentations, and poster sessions will provide platforms for sharing findings and innovative ideas.
